

Catlin Gabel School

By Ted Kaye

Catlin Gabel School in Portland is the largest nondenominational private school in Oregon, with over 770 students from preschool through the twelfth grade. Considered a national leader in progressive education, the school's purpose is "supporting inspired learning leading to responsible action," with an emphasis on academics and experiential learning. It is known for educating the children of Portland's socioeconomic elite within a diverse student body.

Catlin Gabel was the result of the 1957 merger of the Catlin-Hillside School and the Gabel Country Day School, with Henry Failing Cabell as the board chair. Catlin, in northwest Portland, had been founded by Ruth Catlin in 1911 as Miss Catlin's School; it absorbed the Cady School of Music and created the elementary-level Hillside School in 1928. Gabel, in Southwest Portland, had been founded by Priscilla Gabel in 1931 as the successor to the Preparatory School—also known as the Jewell School (originally the Portland Academy)—founded in 1859.

In 1958, Catlin Gabel moved to Honey Hollow Farm (the former estate of Thomas J. Autzen and later Jack Dant) on Southwest Barnes Road. The upper school moved first, and the other schools moved over the next ten years. Original buildings on the 67-acre campus include the Barn and the Dant House, which was designed by Ernest F. Tucker in 1942. Some of the modern structures were designed by noted local architects John Storrs, Thomas Hacker, and Brad Cloepfil. Other campuses have included Northwest Culpepper Terrace (1914–1968; now the Hillside Center) and Raleigh Park (1936–1958; now Raleigh Park School).

Catlin Gabel School is coeducational, with a student–teacher ratio of 7:1 (including all teaching staff). Its four divisions are Beginning School (preschool and kindergarten), Lower School (grades 1–5), Middle School (grades 6–8), and Upper School (grades 9–12). Ninety-nine percent of Catlin Gabel graduates attend four-year colleges or universities, and the senior class often includes National Merit scholars.

Catlin Gabel was the first independent school in Oregon accredited by the Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools. It withdrew from the association in 1960 over teacher certification requirements because of its commitment to a progressive educational philosophy. The school is now accredited by the Northwest Association of Independent Schools.

Catlin Gabel was transformed financially in the late 1980s by a $3.8 million bequest from Howard Vollum, the co-founder of Tektronix and a parent of alumni, which bolstered an endowment that in 2015 exceeded $30 million. Other major donors have included Penny and Phil Knight and the Malone Family Foundation. In 1989, Catlin Gabel School was the first high school to connect to the Internet through Bitnet, an academic network. In 2011, the school was a founding member of the Global Online Academy.

Catlin Gabel was widely known for its annual four-day rummage sale, which took place from 1945 to 2009 and was once the nation's largest all-volunteer event of its type; during those sixty-five years it raised nearly $10 million (in 2009 dollars) for financial aid. Currently 27 percent of students receive financial assistance. The Palma Scholars program, named for former head of school Lark Palma, also provides financial support for students.

A member of the Oregon State Athletics Association, Catlin Gabel competes in the 3A-1 Lewis & Clark League in soccer, cross-country, volleyball, swimming, basketball, baseball, tennis, golf, and track and field. In 1960, the first indoor tennis court west of the Rockies was built on the campus. A pioneer in high school soccer in Oregon, its teams won successive state championships (boys 1969–1974, girls 1994–2004) and have remained perennial contenders. Catlin Gabel's mascot is the Eagles, its colors are blue and white, and its logo since 1912 has been a pine tree. Its traditional sports and academic rival is Oregon Episcopal School.

Notable faculty members have included culinary pioneer James Beard, artist/educator Rachael Griffin, future Portland mayor Vera Katz, and historian E. Kimbark MacColl, who served as head of the school in 1957–1966. Prominent alumni include department store magnate Phil Hawley (1943), United Nations refugee high commissioner Sadako Ogata (1946), science educator J. Mary Taylor

(1948), actress Gretchen Corbett (1963), artist Margot Voorhies Thompson (1966), businessman Jordan Schnitzer (1969), filmmaker Gus Van Sant (1971), news anchor Allen Schaffler (1973), planner David Bragdon (1977), journalist David Shipley (1981), and comedian Megan Amram (2006).

Sources

CGS School Profile, CGS website [www.catlin.edu]

A History of Catlin Gabel (n.d.)

The Caller, Winter 2008, "Catlin-Hillside and Gabel Country Day Merge in 1957", "Catlin Gabel Timeline", "Honey Hollow Farm"

The Oregon Encyclopedia

https://www.oregonencyclopedia.org/articles/catlin_gabel_school/